Miller holds 7 point lead in Alaska Senate Race

Raleigh, N.C. - Joe Miller is favored heading into the final two days of the US Senate campaign in Alaska. $37 \%$ of voters say they'll pick him while $30 \%$ plan to vote for Scott McAdams and another 30\% plan to write in Lisa Murkowski.

Miller is winning despite having the worst personal favorability numbers of the three candidates. Only $36 \%$ have a positive opinion of him while $59 \%$ view him in a negative light. McAdams is by far the most popular with $50 \%$ rating him favorably to only $30 \%$ with an unfavorable one. Voters aren't very enamored with Murkowski either, giving her a 37/53 approval rating.

How can McAdams be so much more popular than Miller yet still be trailing the race? It's because $92 \%$ of the small group of voters that does like Miller is planning to vote for him. But only $56 \%$ of the voters with a positive opinion of McAdams are intending to cast their ballots for him, while 31\% of them are going for Lisa Murkowski.

The high number of voters who like McAdams, dislike Miller, and are voting for Murkowski place the race in a whole different light than has been thought of the last few months. Murkowski's campaign, rather than propping herself up at the expense of Miller, may actually end up propping Miller up at the expense of McAdams.

It appears that Murkowski will lose this race. There are 2 main reasons for that. The first is that she retained little goodwill from Republicans after deciding to make an independent bid. Only $27 \%$ of GOP voters are planning to vote for her on Tuesday, down from 31\% from a PPP poll earlier in October.

The second reason Murkowski's headed for a loss is that she failed to dominate with independents. She is slightly ahead with them, getting 34\% to 32\% for McAdams and $31 \%$ for Miller. But they're not providing her with a strong base of support the way Democrats are for McAdams and Republicans for Miller.
"This race has been so unpredictable I wouldn't write off any of the candidates yet," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "Joe Miller certainly looks like the favorite but the biggest surprise in Alaska this year would be if there wasn't a surprise."

PPP surveyed 1,539 likely Alaska voters on October $30^{\text {th }}$ and 31 st. The margin of error for the survey is $+/-2.5 \%$. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.
