Miller leads but Alaska Senate looks competitive

Raleigh, N.C. - Joe Miller's surprising victory in Tuesday's Republican Senate primary has given Democrats at least a glimmer of hope in Alaska, although that would fade if the defeated Lisa Murkowski ends up running in the general election as the Libertarian candidate.

Miller leads Democratic nominee Scott McAdams 47-39. McAdams benefits from a more united party, getting $81 \%$ of the Democratic vote to Miller’s $73 \%$ of the Republicans. The candidates split even with independents at 42\%, a good number for Democrats in a year where their candidates are largely getting blown out with that group of voters.

In a three way race with Murkowski running as a Libertarian Miller would still lead but with only $38 \%$ to $34 \%$ for Murkowski and $22 \%$ for McAdams. The folks who go for Murkowski favor McAdams 47-23 in a two way contest so somewhat counterintuitively she would actually hurt Democratic chances even though she'd de facto make it a race with 2 Republicans and a Democrat.

Murkowski's 50/43 approval spread still makes her one of the more popular Senators in the country in PPP's polling but her 52\% support from Democrats is actually better than her $47 \%$ with Republicans, speaking to the trouble she had in Tuesday's primary. Miller is unpopular with $36 \%$ of voters seeing him favorably and $52 \%$ negatively. McAdams is still largely anonymous with $53 \%$ of voters offering no opinion about him.
"There's still a lot of uncertainty about what the final candidate field in Alaska will look like," said Dean Debnam, President of Public Policy Polling. "But it’s clear this race will be more competitive than anyone ever would have imagined a week ago."

PPP surveyed 1,306 likely voters on August $27^{\text {th }}$ and 28th. The margin of error is $+/-$ $2.7 \%$. Other factors, such as refusal to be interviewed and weighting, may introduce additional error that is more difficult to quantify.

Complete results are attached and can be found at www.publicpolicypolling.com.
